

The Problem of Knowledge

A. J. Ayer

PENGUIN BOOKS

CONTENTS

PREFACE

1. PHILOSOPHY AND KNOWLEDGE

- (i) The method of philosophy - (ii) Key features of knowledge - (iii) Does knowledge consist in being in a special state of mind? - (iv) Discussion of medical philosophy and language - (v) Summary of chapter one and two

2. SCEPTICISM AND CERTAINTY

- (i) Philosophical scepticism - (ii) The quest for certainty - (iii) 'I think therefore I am' - (iv) Are my sensations an alias for doubt? - (v) Public and private lives of scepticism - (vi) Are mistakes about one's own knowledge inevitable and useful? - (vii) How do we know? - (viii) Doubts about causal reasoning: the problem of induction and the nature of empirical arguments - (ix) Remarks on the dubious methods of guaranteeing the sceptic

3. PHENOMENA

- (i) Are physical objects directly perceived? - (ii) The argument from illusion - (iii) A method of introducing evidence - (iv) Concerning the beginning of time etc - (v) Space, motion and the causal theory of perception - (vi) Phenomenation - (vii) The question of what we know about physical objects

4. MEMORY

- (i) Habit-memory and the memory of events - (ii) Distinguishability of memory-traces - (iii) In what does memory consist? - (iv) Memory and the concept of the past - (v) Concerning the analytical statements about the past - (vi) The past and the future: memory and anticipation - (vii) Why cannot you recall what?

5. MORAL AND POLITICAL

- (i) What makes a person the person that he is? - (ii) General criteria of personal identity: being the same physical body; the number of experiences; or that one has the same intentions? - (iv) The theory of platonism - (v) The analysis and justification of platonism: place value judgements

APPENDIX